PENN STATE EXTENSION BEE KINDS TO POLLINATORS

Tuesday, June 6 | 6pm
Lincoln Community Room
Registration Required

Did you know that the world needs bees and other pollinators? Did you also know that there is a bee shortage? Well, you can help! Pollinators are needed for more than just helping your flowers bloom. They are also vital for making animal feed, construction supplies, fabrics and medicine. But bees and butterflies need to drink water to survive and bird baths are too deep for them. Find out how to make a bee bath to take home and start saving these important pollinators!

This course comes with a Bee Bath kit. Please only register for the number of kits your group will need.

Penn State Extension is a modern educational organization that is dedicated to delivering science based education when and where you want it. They provide information to people, businesses, and communities on a wide variety of subjects. Such subjects are 4-H and youth development, food safety and quality, agronomy and natural resources, horticulture, and animal systems.

Registration is required & space is limited so, please sign up online at <http://events.eriepubliclibrary.org> or call 814-451-7085.
